It is defined by a single vertical line that runs from the top margin to the bottom margin, and two horizontal lines that intersect this vertical line. The horizontal lines are positioned approximately one-third and two-thirds of the way down the page. This layout creates four rectangular sections: a top-right section, a middle-left section, a middle-right section, and a bottom-left section. The top-left section is empty, while the other three sections are also empty, providing space for calculations or diagrams.
